

rennsweat grün

we took inspiration from a porsche interior for grün, our green rennsweat. we debuted it on may 30, 2026 at our los angeles pop-up as the la exclusive, our first piece to release in person before it ever touched our website. on july 3, we brought the remaining pairs online as our first premade drop.

no preorder window, no production wait. at the july release, the remaining pairs were in orlando with a stated dispatch time of 2-3 business days. like every rennsweat, grün is cut from 500 gsm korea-sourced cotton with a plaid lining in the pockets and at the ankle, curved front pockets set with metal rivets, and embroidery on the left pocket.

the fit is oversized and wide, sized s through xl. grün is never restocking. the release that exists is the release that will ever exist.

when a size goes it is gone, and the piece moves to our archive. the full story of the pop-up, told by the people who ran it, lives on the log.

the release connects an in-person event with our online catalog. los angeles was the first setting for the colorway, and the july launch made the remaining pairs available beyond the pop-up. that sequence is what distinguishes grün in our archive: the garment existed at the event before it became a website release.

the porsche-interior reference sits within an established rennsweat design. the green colorway changes its character while the wide fit, plaid details, riveted pockets and embroidery keep it connected to the other versions. we recorded the event around the product on our log; this release records the garment, its construction and the move from an in-person exclusive to a premade online drop.
